Salson Logistics, a New Jersey based truckload carrier, announces the receipt of 50 new Freightliner Cascadia power units. Anthony Berritto President and CEO of Salson Logistics says that the addition of these power units to the Salson OTR fleet is due to the increased business from our existing transportation partners and the addition of some key new partners. While Mr. Berritto still considers the truckload market soft at best, the dedication to detail and the service provided to our partners by the Salson team has required Salson to be proactive and commit to the future of our company and our partners by increasing our fleet size. "Our customers deserve the best in service and equipment, and the addition of the new 2010 Freightliner Cascadia's is what we think best for both entities. This is Salson's way of ensuring our partners that we are in it for the long haul", explains Mr. Berritto.

The first Cascadia will be assigned to Ronnie Collins. Ronnie is an 11 year veteran driver for Salson. Ronnie says he is honored to be the first to receive one of the new Cascadia's and looks forward to many more years at Salson. Travis Smith, Executive Vice President of Salson, explains that the addition of these power units is the first part of a planned growth cycle for Salson. Mr. Smith further explains that Salson plans to grow the OTR fleet continually over the next few months as part of the expansion schedule for the company. "It pleases me to be able to present Ronnie with the first of the new Cascadia's. Ronnie has earned this privilege by supporting Salson and our partners with his many years of service."
